If the University of Waterloo is holding in-person classes in Spring 2020, the course will be run in much the same way as it was in Winter 2019. A pointer to that version of the course is on my personal website. There will of course be new readings, new assignments, some new RPEs (and with the increase in class size likely 10 RPEs happening during the term). If uWaterloo proposes to move classes in Spring 2020 online, I would imagine still a similar arrangement for the course with respect to workload and requirements. Several written assignments will still be submitted and the newsgroup would be used to manage both class discussion and question/answering for the RPEs. More details will be provided, eventually. There would still be no exams in the course. Students would also still need to remain within their section only and to form groups within that section as well.
